Leonard Baron, moderator of the late Brooklyn council, that Tilton has been a cowardly similarer of Bescher, whose magnanimity alone saved blue a discorder, in response to an encore, sang his friends had any intimation of his appointment, and that it was a matter of great surprise. While flattered by a renomination for congress, the receipt of the President's telegram occasioned a sense of sadness, as the acceptance of an office in the cabinet involved his parting with his constituents, who have placed so much confidence in him, and to whom he is so strongly attached. Tilton closes his letter to Rev. Dr.

After leaving Marshall I soon saw an improvement in the lands and crops, and by the time we reached Minneola I could see a decided improvement in both lands and crops. This is a beautiful location for a city, and being surrounded by such a country it is bound to be a considerable place. One thing I will say, in the winding up of this letter, for the benefit of those who think of coming to this country, if they expect to come here and live without work they had better stay where they are, and save the expense and trouble of the trip, for the people here work, those that can get work, and others would if they could get work to do. Per cent decrease on 1871... In the case of every State, except Texas, there is a material decrease, com-pared with last year, in the area planted. The total estimated acreage last year was 9,843,723; while this year, as shown in the above statement, the returns of the agricultural department indicate 8,-785,756 acres, or 1,057,967 acres less than in 1873. All other things being equal, this decline of 10.74 per cent in the area planted would imply a correspond-ingly smaller crop than last year, or, to be more explicit, a reduction of about 450 000 baies compared with the crop of 1873. But we cannot be by any means certain that all the conditions affecting the out-turn will be equal to those of the out-turn will be equal to those of last year. The conditions of weather, labor, state of soil, insects, etc., are all at present undetermined, and we have therefore no means of judging how far the yield will correspond to the reduction in the acreage. The agricultural report gives estimates as to the condition of the crop in June, the estimates being expressed by regarding 100 as representing a normal or fair condition. presenting a normal or fair condition while the figures show the approxima-tion to that standard. The following are the estimates for each State, cor pared with the like returns of condition

This comparison makes a very unfavorable showing for the present condi-tion of the crop, the cause of which is thus well explained in the report: The season has been remarkable for heavy and recent rains during the month of April throughout the cotton States In some sections the aggregate rain-fall reported exceeded sixteen Inches. All the rivers, creeks, and spring branches, even, overflowed their banks, destroying the plants, and prevented germination in newly-planted lands. In the more southern belt, replanting was general, both in bottom and uplands. From the first week in May to its close, drought was almost universal. The soil was packed and afterward baked by the sun, retarding outliviation, and presenting. retarding cultivation and preventing growth. The stand is therefore very poor, many plants not having made their appearance on the first of June. Since the last of May light showers have been general, and the prospects are much improved. Fields are much cleaner than at this date last year, and can easily be kept free from weeds. With favorable weather rapid improvement is certain, and a fair com with July is quite probable at the next

The following comparison of acreage planted with the actual crop, each year since 1969, shows that the correspondence between the yield and the area planted is by no means uniform

In 1870, when we had a crop of 4,350,-000 bales, the acreage was only about 100,000 above that of this year, and last year's crop was about 150,000 bales less year's crop was about 150,000 bales less than that of 1870, although about 1,000, 000 acres more was planted than in the latter year. In 1872, with 30,000 acres more planted than this year, the crop was 3,830,000 bales. The average area planted for the last four years has been 8 852,130 acres; and the average crop for the same period, 3 864,294 bales; the acreage is consequently about 67,000
